President Ma Ying-jeou (馬英九) yesterday acknowledged that consumer vouchers (消費卷) were a short-term economic stimulus measure, but said the decision to issue them and include the rich in the scheme was the right one. The president said there had been opposition to the vouchers because of doubts about their effectiveness in stimulating the economy. "All signs have indicated that it was the correct decision to issue them [the vouchers] and to include rich people in the scheme," he said. Ma said he realized the short-term incentive was not sufficient to revive the economy and that his administration had never considered this as its main economic policy. As part of a NT$500 billion (US$15 billion) package, he said there would be similar measures in future.
